NOTES

Unless otherwise noted, the foregoing discussion compares financial information for the three months ended March 31, 2012 to the same period in 2011.

On September 23, 2011, Liberty Interactive completed the split-off of a wholly owned subsidiary, Liberty Media Corporation ("LMC") (formerly known as Liberty CapStarz, Inc. and Liberty Splitco, Inc.) (the "Split-Off"). At the time of the Split-Off, LMC owned all the assets, businesses and liabilities previously attributed to the Liberty Capital and Liberty Starz tracking stock groups. The Split-Off was effected by means of Wtby mea oups.

I guess first, we are attempting to invest capital. And I think we're indifferent as to whether Ventures has actually been yet - has been created or we're in the process of creating it. We're looking out with - to the best of our ability for investments that are attractive. Its, you know, candidly, a slow pace. Cash coming in has outweighed cash going out, particularly with the monetization of the Trip and Expedia stakes. We have made, as you know in the past, some green investments we call them. They're largely tax advantaged and I think we're looking for some more of those. We also continue to look at TMT and Internet related items where we don't think they necessarily fit particularly well in the other Liberty portfolios. But I - we have nothing of substance to announce today on any of those.

Matthew Harrigan, Wunderlich Securities, Inc.

. . . I don't think you spoke that much on the e-commerce businesses, but you're clearly getting grotesquely little value for those businesses in your stock price. Can you give us - I know you talked at one point about giving a little bit more granularity by business. And does it really make sense to keep that together? I mean, could the next move be decoupling the e-commerce businesses from LINTA in order to get a richer valuation?

Gregory B. Maffei, President & Chief Executive Officer

And as far as the second point I think we would tend to agree that the strong performance of the e-commerce companies is probably not reflected in the multiple of LINTA. One of the reasons obviously we're pursuing things like the Ventures tracker is to try and highlight better the . . . performances of QVC and those e-commerce companies. And while those e-commerce companies relative to the size of QVC are relatively small, I think it's fair to argue we don't think the . . . multiple's reflected . . . Two things; we'll see what happens over time as we provide the greater clarity around the operating businesses and ventures. We'll always consider looking at another tracker if that doesn't work. No plans are [intended] but secondly to the degree that multiple seems low and doesn't reflect the performance of those businesses we'll try and take advantage of it with incremental share repurchase and if the market is willing to hand us the stock back at what we think is a relatively inexpensive price, we'll thank them and execute on a share repurchase.
